TOWNS AND CITIES OF THE FORMER RUSSIAN EMPIRE DURING THE CIVIL WAR

Urban Population Estimates for 275 Settlements Across the 48 Pre-War Provinces

11 November 2026 - Aust Kätzchen | austkaeztchen@confoederatio.org

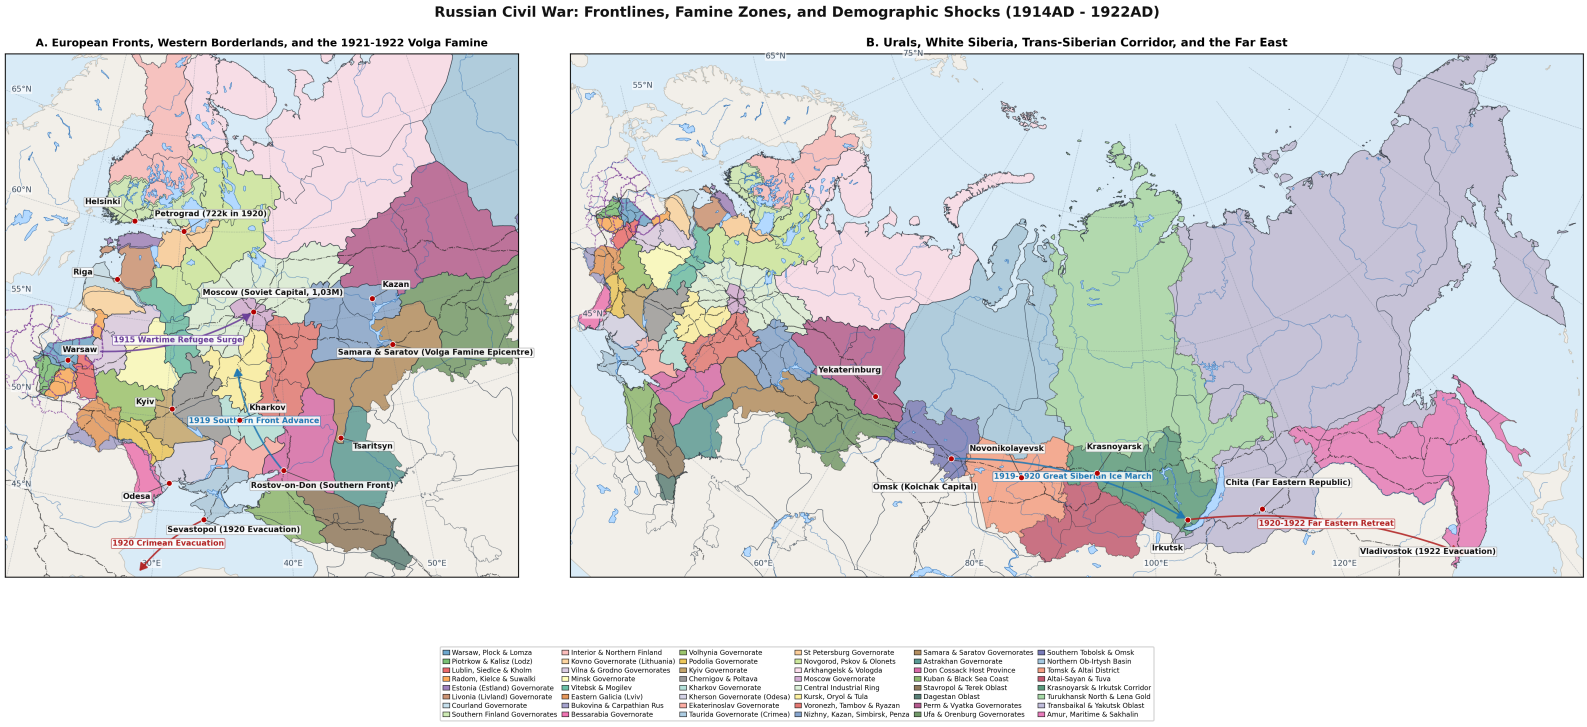

Figure 1. The 48 pre-war provinces and 275 catalogued urban settlements, showing the 1920-1921 western frontier treaties and the interior cities affected by War Communism and the 1921-1922 famine.

Abstract

Between 1914 and 1926 the towns of the former Russian Empire went through two sharp upheavals. First World War evacuations emptied the western borderland cities of Riga, Liepaja, Kovno, Vilna and Warsaw while crowding rear garrison and railway towns in the interior; then food and fuel shortages under War Communism cut Petrograd by 70,2% and Moscow by nearly half between 1917 and 1920 before the New Economic Policy (NEP) and post-war refugee returns restored urban trade and industry. This gazetteer presents population figures for 275 urban settlements across the 48 pre-war provinces (18,61M km2) at nine benchmark dates from 1914 to 1926.

Methodology

The settlement series are drawn from the 1914 Russian statistical yearbooks, the 1917 town census [1], the 28 August 1920 Russian census [2], the 1920 Finnish census [3], the 1920 and 1925 Latvian censuses [4], the 30 September 1921 Polish census [5][6], the 15 February 1921 Czechoslovak census [7], the 28 December 1922 Estonian census [8], the 17 September 1923 Lithuanian census [9], Romanian municipal counts for Bessarabia and Bukovina [10][11], the 15 March 1923 Soviet urban census [12] and the 17 December 1926 All-Union Census [13][14][15].
